Bijar

Located in the northeast of Sanandaj in Kurdistan Province, Bijar is between Zanjan to the north, Sanandaj to the west, Qorveh and Hamedan to the south, and Khodabandeh to the east. People speak Kurdish in Bijar, which is known for its hand-woven carpet.

Design

What marks the distinction between Bijar carpets and rugs and those woven in Sanandaj is the variety of designs, since such a wide variety of designs cannot be seen elsewhere in Iran. Bijar design usually includes lachak toranj (medallion and corners) designs floating on a floral background, woven in red and blue. Also, other repeated patterns can be used to fill up the field, be it with lachak toranj or without it. Shah abbasi motifs are also common in Bijar carpet, and Mina Khani and bid-e majnoon (weeping willow) designs are thought to have originated from this area.

Bijar carpet designs are categorized into urban and rural ones.

Rural designs include saman bar khanom, mina khani, bid-e majnoon, kharchangi, and baharestan, all mainly woven in villages.

On the other side are those commonly woven in the cities including bazu bandi, gol farang, shekargah, gol-e mirza ali, mostowfi, mahi dar ham, lachak toranj, shah abbasi, and rugs with images of lions.

Bijar carpet weavers merge harati patterns into their designs in various methods.

Type of knots

Weavers use symmetrical (Turkish) knots of considerably high density as there are between 1000 to 3600 knots in one square decimeter of the carpet. Sometimes, as many as 5 yarns are generously knotted into warps. Bijar carpets are heavy as the yarns are cut longer than other types and are thus called the iron carpet in the United States.
